Abstract:

The APA Ethics Committee and the American Psychological Association of Graduate Students (APAGS) are pleased to announce this annual prize for a graduate student paper on psychology and ethics. "Psychology and ethics" is defined broadly, to include any empirical or theoretical paper that examines psychology and ethics in relation to science or research, practice, education, public interest or theory of ethics. The paper must indicate why its particular focus is worthy of attention. Although papers written for ethics courses are acceptable, it is generally the case that course papers require considerable additional work to warrant serious contention for the Ethics Prize, which is normally awarded to a paper of publishable or near-publishable quality. Papers will be judged based upon quality and originality of ideas, clarity of analysis and expression and adequacy of literature review.

Eligibility:

The prize is open to APAGS members enrolled in a psychology graduate program at the time the paper is submitted. It is expected that authors will receive assistance from faculty advisors. Such assistance must not be sufficiently extensive for the faculty member to merit authorship on the paper. The student author(s) must be able to claim sole authorship. Jointly-authored student papers are acceptable. In the case of a jointly-authored paper, one prize will be awarded.
