DESCRIPTION: Although his French is not good, the writer asks the addressee to inform the prefec of the Sacred Congregation "de Propaganda Fide" [Giacomo Filippo Fransoni] that the landholders of Prince Edward Island wishes to have an English [i.e., English-speaking] bishop, instead of a Canadian [Lower-Canadian] bishop. They do not speak English and fear "l'esprit revolutionnaire" [f.46r] of the Canadians [Lower Canadians]. It is also well known that they do not allow any bishop in Québec except one of their country [Lower Canada], whereas the people of Prince Edward Island intends to be able to instruct their offsprings in the language of their country [English]. The writer's brother [John McDonald], born in the colony [Prince Edward Island], is a priest himself and could be a candidate for the bishopric, except that many consider him Canadian [Lower Canadian] because he was mostly educated there. The latter, however, is unaware of this letter. The writer suggests that Bramston of London [James Yorke Bramston, bishop of Usula, vicar apostolic in the London district], be entrusted with the selection of candidate. Any letter for the writer will be forwarded to Bermuda, a six-day voyage from Prince Edward Island, where he is captain and paymaster of the 30th Regiment. This letter is dated "At Messrs Cox & Co.'s Army Agents, Craigs Court" [f.46r].

In the "Nota," the decree of the general congregation of 16 apr 1731 is copied, in which Clement XII granted Dosquet [Pierre-Herman Dosquet], bishop of Samos and coadjutor of the bishop of Québec [François-Louis de Pourroy de Lauberivière], the faculty to ordain 20 natives [not Indians, but Canadians of European origin] ad titulum missionis. It mentions the Jesuits in Canada [Lower Canada] and in Maryland, where religion had continued to thrive in spite of Protestant opposition, and ascribes the success of Catholicism in Canada [Lower Canada] to the erection of a bishopric in 1659 (between 1784 and 1840 Catholics grew from 113,000 to 600,000).
